

Interested in discussing your rural work experiences?

Have you held part-time, full-time or summer employment in a rural community?

Have you worked in a fast food restaurant, a fish plant, or other local business?

Have you earned wages babysitting, delivering newspapers, or working for the municipal council?

Whatever the job, if you've worked in a rural community, then we are interested in hearing from you.

The work experiences of rural youth are unique and dynamic, but their quality of work and occupational health issues are not well researched. To better understand occupational health and safety of rural youth, researchers at Memorial University want to talk to youth who have worked in rural areas. By holding focus groups with rural youth, the researchers will learn about the understanding and experience of work for rural youth, rural youth work quality, and occupational health and safety issues relevant to youth in rural work contexts.

If you are aged 19-24, have worked in rural environments, and would like to take part in focus group sessions, please call 1-866-441-4147 or e-mail ruralityouthproject@hotmail.com and leave your name and contact information.

The list of focus group participants and the information provided in the focus groups will be kept confidential.

Focus group participants will receive a $10 honorarium.

The research is being directed by Dr. Nicole Power, Department of Sociology, and Dr. Kate Dupré, Faculty of Business Administration, and has received ethics approval from ICEHR, Memorial University.

Please take one.
